Section 1.2 - Aggregate fee levels

The University proposes to charge fees for full-time undergraduate courses in 2027/28 at the maximum level permitted, subject to approval of this Fee Limit Statement. This excludes classroom-based foundation year programmes. The University will not charge above the maximum fee level set by the Welsh Government. The current maximum fee level for 2026/27 is £9,790.

Tuition fees may increase annually in line with changes determined by the Welsh Government. Home undergraduate fees, which are regulated by the UK and Welsh Governments, will be adjusted accordingly. The fees stated apply to the first year of study only. For continuing students studying in Wales, fees in subsequent years may increase annually, up to the maximum fee level permitted by the Welsh Government.

The maximum annual fee for classroom-based foundation year programmes will be £5,760.
Any amendments to fee levels will be communicated to current and prospective students via the University website and other established communication channels. In response to any changes to the maximum fee level permitted by the Welsh Government, the University reserves the right to revise its fee levels following submission of this Fee Limit Statement. Any such revisions will be subject to approval by Medr. Changes to fee levels may affect the full range of provision set out in this Statement, which is based on an assumed maximum annual fee level of £9,790 and therefore informs the University's aggregate fee position.

The published fee represents the annual tuition fee for the course. Students can calculate the total tuition fee for the full length of their programme by multiplying the relevant annual fee by the number of years of study. For example, a three-year course with an annual fee of £9790 would result in a total tuition fee of £29370, subject to any permitted variations.

For students who enrolled in previous years, the University will honour the commitments set out in the Fee and Access Plan or Fee Limit Statement applicable to their year of entry.

The University website will be the main source of information on fees and student support, supplemented by other digital communications. Clear and up-to-date information on fees and support arrangements will be made available at the earliest opportunity to support informed decision-making. Information on fees and funding is published at https://wrexham.ac.uk/fees-and-funding/, and the approved Fee Limit Statement will be published following approval by Medr.

A student's aggregate fee liability will reflect the maximum fee applicable in each year of study and may increase annually in accordance with Welsh Government policy.

The University will ensure that fee regulations and associated information apply consistently across all routes of entry and subject areas. This will include provision for specific circumstances, including students transferring from other institutions, deferring study, or changing mode of attendance (for example, from full-time to part-time). The University will make explicit that tuition fees cover all elements required for successful completion of the course.

In providing information to prospective students, the University will comply with Consumer and Markets Authority requirements, ensuring that applicants are given the information necessary to make informed decisions prior to application. This will include, in addition to tuition fees, details of any mandatory additional costs associated with course completion, such as field trips, specialist equipment, or studio or bench fees, where applicable.

Offer documentation will include links to the University's terms and conditions, including applicable rules and regulations, together with information on course content and structure. Applicants who are offered a place will be provided with clear and timely information relating to their programme of study, including timetables, assessment requirements, fees, regulations, student support arrangements, campus developments, and any material changes.
