Module aims

To develop an advanced understanding of the contribution psychology can make to understanding and addressing particular forms of criminal behaviour and the efficacy of forensic approaches to managing those behaviours.

Module Learning Outcomes - at the end of this module, students will be able to:

1	Demonstrate in depth knowledge of psychological models for understanding and responding to general offending behaviour.
2	Demonstrate in depth knowledge of psychological models for understanding and responding to sexual and violent offending
3	Critically assess the efficacy of interventions that seek to prevent reoffending.

Assessment

Indicative Assessment Tasks:

1. Case Study (1000 words): Students to provide a referenced court report providing psychological insight into how an offence came to be perpetrated
2. Report (1000 words) Students to identify a known violent or sexual offender and apply one model for understanding the offence to the case.
3. Essay (1000 words) exploring the efficacy of interventions that seek to prevent reoffending
