2.4 Learning and teaching strategy

This new postgraduate accounting and finance programme applies a learning and teaching strategy based upon Wrexham University's commitment to Universal Design for Learning (UDL), the key principle of which holds that students are encouraged to participate in higher education when they are exposed to flexible ways of learning by staff that engage them in different ways using innovative and creative approaches. To this end the programmes apply the University's Active Learning Framework (ALF) supporting accessible, and flexible learning.

The Business School implements the standards laid down in the University's policies and procedures and provides each module at all levels with a module handbook, providing full details of the aims and learning outcomes relevant to the module and how teaching will be processed. The module handbook also provides information on the assessments, hand in dates, tutor support arrangements and a reading list.

The business programmes are delivered by a team with extensive experience of delivering face to face, flexible synchronous and a-synchronous online teaching and support. Staff are industry professionals who also hold recognised teaching qualifications and/or are Fellows of the HEA.

In accordance with sound educational research and current best practice, the programme will be delivered and assessed through a broad range of methods, reflecting the distinctive features of the programme, providing learning opportunities in a supportive environment to ensure knowledge transfer is affected. Students studying the postgraduate accounting and finance programme will have access to multiple learning opportunities on every module including face to face and online classes (with core and guest lecturers), seminars, access to short, pre-recorded lectures, lecture notes and handouts, and directions to relevant essential and additional reading. An interactive approach to learning is always maintained and staff will typically engage students with key issues by drawing on case studies and their practical experiences in the world of business. Lectures on all programmes will be organised around lecture inputs, quizzes, recorded video content, larger and small group discussions and debates. Face to Face or video mediated appointments can be made with tutoring staff via Microsoft Teams to discuss module content and assignments.

On the postgraduate business programme there will be a focus on future employability in business through our teaching and assessment strategies. Importance will be attached to students developing Key Skills for Employability and the University's Strategy for Supporting Student Learning and Achievement (SSSLA). That strategy is directly aligned to the University's Vision and Strategy 2030, focussing upon the domain of outstanding teaching and learning experience which is compassionate, inclusive and supports student wellbeing, confidence and achievement.

2.5 Assessment strategy

Assessment is carried out in accordance with Wrexham University's Academic Regulations and Assessment Policy. The approach adopted is informed by guidance published by the QAA to ensure integrity in distance teaching, learning and assessment practices QAA and the QAA UK Quality Code for Higher Education (Advice and Guidance Assessment). The overall strategy for the programme is to ensure that assessment provides the opportunity for students to demonstrate achievement of the module learning outcomes, and the potential to demonstrate achievement at the threshold and exemplary levels. Assessment tasks will reflect the current QAA Characteristics, and the criteria will be contextualised to reflect the learning outcomes of the module. The practical nature of the programme is reinforced through the importance of coursework as part of the learning process and assessment. Despite the importance of their theoretical basis, many of the concepts are often best grasped by practical exercises and assignments. Practical coursework includes but is not limited to exercises for private study or in practical / tutorial classes and team / individual projects and presentations and role plays and will be designed to increase students' employability skills. Students will receive regular formative assessment and feedback throughout the programme, particularly during lectures, tutorials and guided self-study activities. This may include practice tasks, in-class exercises, quizzes, tutor questioning, peer discussion, and individual or group feedback, provided verbally during class activities or in written form on draft and practice work. These opportunities will help students monitor their progress, identify areas for improvement, and build confidence before completing summative assessments.

The postgraduate accounting and finance programme provides students with opportunities to evidence their learning in different ways and fits well with the university's wider focus on assessments that are embedded in employability, it is recognised that particular care needs to be taken to ensure that the resource and intellectual requirements of these assessments are commensurate with the level being assessed. Specific detail on this is given in the relevant module specification. Module assessments will be designed to be sufficiently varied to accommodate different learning styles. Assignments are set in advance and provided to students in module handbooks at the commencement of their studies and marked and returned by module (using the online system Turnitin) with students being given in depth electronic feedback on all assessments within an appropriate timescale determined by university regulations (within 3 weeks). Such feedback will be provided on a standard form, which includes feedback on performance and identifies areas for improvement and development (feedforward). Assessment criteria are published in the student programme handbook issued at the beginning of the academic year and are drawn from published good practice guidelines. The use of Turnitin supports students to develop their academic writing style as well as a tool to detect plagiarism or collaboration. All module assessments will be internally verified with a sample being moderated by the external examiner in accordance with the University's Regulatory requirements. An overview of the assessment details will be provided in the Module Handbooks and full details of the assessment criteria for each module is provided in the module specification, which forms part of the module pack available to students. Students will be informed of the penalties which apply for non-submission. In addition, students will be made aware of the procedure relating to extenuating circumstances and will be encouraged to work closely with their tutors should they require support and guidance on this matter.

Wrexham University encourages responsible and transparent use of generative AI, so long as it aligns with each assignment's guidelines, is used as a supplementary aid, and is fully declared following academic integrity standards.
